

Affordable Health Care Is a Shared Responsibility

The entire health care system — providers, insurance companies, drug manufacturers, medical device suppliers, labor unions, governmental agencies, and others — must work together.

Hospitals are working to make care affordable

Investing in primary care & community-based services, so patients stay healthier and get routine care faster

Helping Californians enroll in Medi-Cal, ensuring they're covered for unexpected health care needs

Embracing value-based care, which emphasizes patients' overall well-being and results in better health outcomes

THE RESULT: California is among the 10 lowest states nationally in per capita hospital costs and overall health care expenses.

WHAT'S NEEDED >

The Office of Health Care Affordability must ensure:

- Cost savings are passed along to consumers instead of pocketed by insurance companies
- Providers can continue to save lives by staying open, delivering complex, sometimes costly care
- Investments in innovation are encouraged to build systems that result in better patient outcomes, despite initially high costs
- Equitable access to high-quality care is improved rather than simply sustained

Patients deserve affordable health care that doesn't sacrifice quality, equity, or access.
